8. [] After talking with [] I called Mr. Leymeister, in the office of Representative Frances P. Bolton. Mr. Leymeister had queried us as to whether we had information concerning the "jamming of Castro's radio." On his initial call, it was suggested he might wish to talk with USIA. On calling today, I found he had talked with USIA and had been advised that there was no American jamming of Castro's radio since this was contrary to the position and policy of our Government with respect to the jamming of radios generally. I told Leymeister the information I had received was essentially the same as that which had been given him by USIA. He thanked us for looking into the matter.

9. [] Jay Sourwine, Senate Internal Security Subcommittee staff, called to say that he wished to renew and recall his earlier conversation with us regarding the Subcommittee's interest in the defection of any Soviet troops from Cuba if they were to become available. (See Journal of 22 November 1962) He said he had read somewhere recently that there had been defections of this type.

Sourwine also wished to pass on information which he had received and which he said may or may not be of interest to us. He said this was an expression of opinion only by a source of the Subcommittee. He said the suggestion had been made that if anyone wanted to find the lost Trujillos "hundreds of millions", they could be found at a villa in Cannes, France. He said this villa originally belonged to Men Minnet, who had married Trujillo's cousin.

transaction, that the individuals involved would not have been procuring other cashier checks. Although the records for the day had not been scrutinized since they are now in archives, the normal purpose of other purchases of cashier checks that might have taken place the same day in Washington by the individuals would have been payable to an individual rather than to a bank.

14. [REDACTED] Met with Sam Scott, Senate Internal Security Subcommittee staff, at his request and was advised that the Subcommittee is planning hearings on the subject of the Communist threat to the United States through the Caribbean and Latin America. Advised that the DDGI had provided testimony on this subject before the Subcommittee on 5 November 1959 and requested, informally, advice as to whether a competent Agency witness could be made available to the Subcommittee to update the information provided the Subcommittee in 1959.
